Biographies

Following an early career in primary school teaching, where Ann Wright's flute playing took increasing prominence in her life, she studied with David Nicholson in Aberdeen, and Judith Mellor in Sheffield, gaining a diploma in flute teaching, and ultimately changing career. Firmly established, for many years, in South Lincolnshire - as flautist and tutor with the County Music Service; and as a recorder-playing member of the Early Music group, Freshe Ayre - she is enjoying the freedom since her recent retirement, to develop and share her love of the flute and its repertoire.

Julie Dearden studied in Cambridge, taking two diplomas in flute, and has been teaching flute for over forty years, with her career beginning in some of the leading music departments in Cambridge schools. She now has a thriving private practice teaching both flute and piano. She has recently revived her love of performing, particularly in chamber ensembles.

Fergus Black was born in Scotland. After taking his degree at St. Andrews University, he studied music in the USA at the University of Pennsylvania and at UCLA, before returning to the UK. He is semi-retired, and chooses to play in concerts he enjoys with people he likes, and teaches a few hours each week. He continues to conduct the St Martin's Singers. He lives in Peterborough with his wife, Helen, and his web site is at www.fergusblackmusic.uk
